Preoperative nutrition has been used to predict the surgical outcome in patients undergoing rectal cancer surgery. The present study aimed to investigate the association between preoperative nutritional status and surgical outcomes in rectal cancer patients treated with open anterior resection. The study sample consisted of 276 patients who underwent open anterior resection for rectal cancer. Preoperative nutritional status was measured by the use of nutritional risk screening (NRS)-2002, and biochemical markers such as albumin, total cholesterol, and creatinine were obtained from the medical records. Patient characteristics were compared between the normal and high nutritional risk groups using the chi-square test, and associations of preoperative nutritional status with surgical
